

What are some of life's deeper issues that people are facing and are there any connecting points with the Christian story?

Is it possible to effectively share your faith and never use words?

What examples of 'Christian' language are unhelpful to those outside the church?

How do you know that you are really being listened to?

Do you have any questions or approaches that you use to stimulate spiritual conversations with your friends?

When is the right time not to say anything?

What is your biggest fear about talking to someone about your faith?

In what way do you think the good news is relevant to those you know who are not Christian? How do you convey this?

Why might we avoid talking about our faith?

Describe a conversation that you had with a friend about the meaning of life, Jesus or some other spiritually related topic.

Try and sum up your Christian story in one sentence?

If you had three minutes how would you tell someone about the Bible's big story?

In what ways does the Holy Spirit help us when we talk to others about our faith?

Are we right to talk about conversations or do we need to focus on 'telling' people about Jesus?

Why do people reject conversations about faith? What could we do differently?

Is the Gospel ever offensive? Is there ever a time to say something challenging? If so, how do we go about it?